How to Prepare for a Divorce Consultation

You've scheduled a consultation with a divorce attorney. Now what? For many clients, it's their first time meeting with a family law attorney – maybe any attorney for that matter– and they have no idea what to expect. This article will help to prepare you for that initial meeting.

Be prepared to provide a short biography of yourself, your spouse, and your children, if any. This is the easy part, as you'll be asked information that you know by heart, such as names, dates of birth, address, date of marriage, education, and work history, including salary information. A divorce attorney will want to get a sense of who you and your spouse are and what you do.
